2*Weekly Question*How does something become a fossil?

When living things die, they are buried by sediment. Water, which contains minerals, seeps into the remains. Over many years, as more layers of sediment pile up, the weight causes the sediment to harden into rock. These hardened minerals create fossils.

Most fossils are formed when minerals replace the hard parts of a plant or an animal, such as wood or bones. This is called a cast.

A. Which one of these is a cast? Circle it.

sand

dinosaur bone

snail

B. Answer each question.

1. What replaces the hard parts in plants and animals to create casts?

2. What do layers of sediment harden into over time?

3. Would a worm make a cast? Why or why not?

Weekly Question

How does something become a fossil?

Sometimes a plant or an animal decays entirely after being buried in sediment. It leaves only its shape in the rock. This kind of fossil is called a mold.

Another kind of fossil is a trace fossil. This fossil isn't from the remains of a plant or an animal. It is from signs of animal activity. Footprints, nests, and droppings are examples of trace fossils. They help scientists learn about how the animals behaved or moved.

Vocabulary

mold

a fossil made when an animal or a plant rots away, leaving its shape in the rock trace fossil

a fossil of an animal's footprints, droppings, or other signs of activity

A. Which of these would NOT make a trace fossil?

Check the boxes next to the correct answers.

☐ a leaf ☐ a footprint ☐ a tooth ☐ a nest

B. Answer the questions.

1. Why are trace fossils important to scientists?

2. Do you think it is more common to find a cast or a mold? Explain.
